

DISASTER DONATION GUIDE

When a major catastrophic event occurs, it is usually followed by a gracious outpouring of love, support, and donations — all of which are essential in the recovery process. The support of our communities is so appreciated, but helping responsibly is critical.

Financial Contributions are the best way to help. This allows The Salvation Army to purchase exactly what disaster survivors need. Supplies can almost always be purchased locally without the added expenses of shipping and storing. Additionally, money spent locally supports the local economies which have suffered losses in the wake of a disaster.

If you would like to donate items, call your local Salvation Army to determine if there is a need. While clothing and household items are considered vital to the Salvation Army Family Store and every day operations, they are generally not needed during disasters.

The Salvation Army disaster services are funded entirely by donation, and we use 100% of all disaster donations in support of disaster relief operations.
